

The Nellemann Building

A loud with a soul Certain buildings invite the raw and unpolished inside. It can be an updated of an old architecture, more often as a companion to the modern. In Randers, the municipal administration has just completed an example of this: A former car dealership, which was built for Nellemann Auto in 1999, and has now become the department of Health and Care for Randers municipality. While the building's modernism of glass, concrete and aluminum adds to the natural stones' brutality, the everyday business in a house has more focus on efficient cleaning and easy maintenance because they have a lot of citizens in and out of the building. The solution of interior design follows the theme of Marmoleum slate which fulfills the opposite wishes: The raw, nature-inspired aesthetic of Marmoleum slate perfectly mimes the structure of the slate, while the path mounted linoleum without welding wire provides a dirt-repellent and homogeneous surface for quick and , replicate washing and care. At the same time, Marmoleum slate delivers a quiet and comfortable soft 'covering' of the 2400 sqm., used by the home care as well as the framework for the municipality's citizens. Here they can get re-trained their functional ability after illness or accidents. One advantage is also that Marmoleum slate offers five different colors, which can be orchestrated together in a different slate language. Justesen Gulve, a part of Hammelsvang A / S, performed the task in an exemplary collaboration between Nellemann and Randers municipality, Justesen Gulve and Forbo Flooring. Several types of coating were in play before the idea of vinyl in several versions ended at Marmoleum slate, which won on sustainability, CO2 accounting and indoor climate. Since then, the result has been well reported by the Randers municipality's Department of Health and Care: - The characterize linoleum's surface gives a nice and exciting expression in the floors, according to Vice offices chief Jens Kjær, Randers municipality. - The result supports the distinctive features of the building, which also include curved wall sections. Marmoleum slate runs along the building's spectacular architecture.
